CLOROXPRO®

Clean for Health

Let's get back to the business of cleaning and disinfecting

Today's professional cleaners are being asked to do more with tighter budgets, resources, all while "cleaning for appearance" is no longer enough. 77% of consumers now consider a businesses' cleaning & disinfecting practices to be a "selling point."¹

Research shows that targeted disinfecting of high-touch items can help reduce the risk of germ transmission in household and workplace environments by up to 80 percent.² In order to deliver results, upgrade your cleaning program to focus on Cleaning for Health.

Cleaning for Health means that your goals include reducing the spread of pathogens and helping to protect the health of your building's occupants, visitors, and staff. It is more than a visual clean. People, products and process are important building blocks in Cleaning for Health.

PEOPLE

You are essential in the fight against the spread of germs and other unwanted matter. You need to clean safely — using products and tools in a way that reduces risk.

PRODUCTS

You need the right products and tools to do your job. You need to use them effectively —choosing the right products at the right time and following directions for use.

PROCESS

You need the right cleaning processes to follow, because efficient processes will save time, minimize waste, and help you clean safely and effectively.

Who Benefits From Cleaning for Health?

Building occupants and visitors (customers, students, employees): safer, healthier environment.

Professional cleaning staff: improve workers safety.

Facilities/business owners: enhance confidence of those visiting the facility.
